Manuscript preparation. The American Psychologist accepts submissions of four types: original articles, comments on published articles, proposals for special sections or special issues, and reports of APA boards, committees, and task forces. Articles must be in English and must be competently written and argued. They may not exceed 35 double-spaced pages in length, including the cover page, abstract, references, tables, and figures. Authors should prepare manuscripts according to the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association (6th ed.). Manuscripts may be copyedited for bias-free language (see chap. 3 of the Publication Manual). Formatting instructions (all copy must be double-spaced) and instructions on the preparation of tables, figures, references, metrics, and abstracts appear in the Manual. For APA's Checklist for Manuscript Submission, see www.apa.org/pubs/authors/manuscript-check.aspx.

Abstract and keywords. All manuscripts must include an abstract containing no more than 180 words typed on a separate page. After the abstract, please supply up to five keywords or brief phrases. Comments and obituaries do not need abstracts or keywords.

Comments. Comments should be submitted no later than two months from the date of the issue containing the article to which they respond; they should meet the same criteria for original articles and should make a reasonable and substantial contribution to the discussion of the topic. Independent comments (i.e., those unrelated to a specific published AP article or special issue) and comments on matters of APA policy or on issues facing the Association are also considered. (Comments on obituaries are not published; comments on comments are rarely considered.) Comments must be limited to 1,000 words (about five pages) and should contain no more than nine references. As for manuscripts, authors should include page numbers and references for quotes. A comment is reviewed by the associate editor who handled the original manuscript. If accepted, it may be accompanied by an invited response from the authors of the original article. An independent comment is prescreened like a regular manuscript; if it passes preliminary review, it gets assigned to an associate editor for a full editorial review. Comments are published in the earliest possible issue of the journal, typically six to eight months after the original article.

Obituaries. Manuscript submissions for the Obituaries section are by invitation only.

Supplemental materials. APA can now place supplementary materials online, available via the published article in the PsycArticles database. To submit such materials, please see www.apa.org/pubs/authors/supp-material.aspx for details.

Proposals for special sections or special issues. Feature sections devoted to the explication of a particular topic are one means of fulfilling the journal's mission. A special section of the journal may contain three or four papers on a single theme, and a special issue may contain somewhat more, depending on the content area. Proposals for special sections or special issues should describe their scope, provide a rationale (including why such a section or issue is timely and what contribution it would make to the literature), and list and describe the proposed papers, with potential authors for each. Potential authors should not be recruited until a proposal is accepted. Authors, in proposing an entire special issue, should be aware that the larger the number of papers included, the more specialized they often become, rendering them less suitable for AP. Proposals are first reviewed by the editor-in-chief and the managing editor. Some special feature proposals are then circulated to two or three individuals for review. Among the factors used in considering a proposal are length of time since this topic was last addressed in the AP, amount of new research conducted since then, whether the range of topics appears appropriate, and whether ethnic, racial, gender, and other types of diversity are reflected in the content and population within topic areas. Proponents of special sections or special issues should also

American Psychologist® is the official journal of the American Psychological Association and, as such, contains archival documents. It also publishes articles on current issues in psychology as well as empirical, theoretical, and practical articles on broad aspects of psychology. Statements contained in the American Psychologist are the personal views of the authors and do not constitute APA policy unless so indicated. APA reserves the right to edit all copy and to refuse ads that are not in concordance with the principles of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (Equal Employment Opportunity). The publication of any advertisement by APA is an endorsement neither of the advertiser nor of the products or services advertised. APA is not responsible for any claims made in an advertisement. Advertisers may not without prior consent incorporate in a subsequent advertisement the fact that a product or service has been advertised in an APA publication. Change of address. Send change of address notice and a recent mailing label to the attention of the Subscriptions Department, American Psychological Association, 750 First Street, NE, Washington, DC 20002-4242, or e-mail subscriptions@apa.org, 30 days prior to the actual change of address. APA will not replace undelivered copies resulting from address changes; journals will be forwarded only if subscribers notify the local post office in writing that they will guarantee periodicals forwarding postage. Copyright and permissions. Those who wish to reuse APA-copyrighted material in a non-APA publication must secure from APA and the author of reproduced material written permission to reproduce a journal article in full or journal text of more than 800 words. APA normally grants permission contingent on permission of the author, inclusion of the APA copyright notice on the first page of reproduced material, and payment of a fee of $25 per page. Permission from APA and fees are waived for those who wish to reproduce a single table or figure from a journal for use in a print product, provided the author's permission is obtained and full credit is given to APA as copyright holder and to the author through a complete citation. (Requesters requiring written permission for commercial use of a single table or figure will be assessed a $25 service fee.) Permission and fees are waived for authors who wish to reproduce their own material for personal use; fees only are waived for authors who wish to use more than a single table or figure of their own material commercially (but for use in edited books, fees are waived for the author only if serving as the book editor). Permission and fees are waived for the photocopying of isolated journal articles for nonprofit classroom or library reserve use by instructors and educational institutions. A permission fee may be charged to the requester if students are charged for the material, multiple articles are copied, or large-scale copying is involved (e.g., for course packs). Access services may use unedited abstracts without the permission of APA or the author. Libraries are permitted to photocopy beyond the limits of U.S. copyright law: (1) post-1977 articles, provided the per-copy fee in the code for this journal (0003-066X/10/$12.00) is paid through the Copyright Clearance Center, 222 Rosewood Drive, Danvers, MA 01923; (2) pre-1978 articles, provided the per-copy fee stated in the Publishers' Fee List is paid through the Copyright Clearance Center, 222 Rosewood Drive, Danvers, MA 01923. Address requests for reprint permission to the Permissions Office, American Psychological Association, 750 First Street, NE, Washington, DC 20002-4242, or go to www.apa.org/about/contact/copyright/index.aspx. Electronic access. APA members who subscribe to this journal have automatic access to all issues of the journal in the PsycARTICLES® full-text database. See <http://my.apa.org/access.html>. Reprints. Authors may order reprints of their articles from the printer when they receive proofs. Single issues, back issues, and back volumes. For information regarding single issues, back issues, or back volumes write to Order Department, American Psychological Association, 750 First Street, NE, Washington, DC 20002-4242, or go to www.apa.org/pubs/journals/subscriptions.aspx. Microform editions. For information regarding microform editions, write to University Microfilms, Ann Arbor, MI 48106.

consider diversity in the selection of manuscript authors. If a proposal is accepted, the proposal author will be responsible for recruiting authors, with possible suggestions from the AP editors. All manuscripts should be submitted together; each paper in a section is circulated separately for peer review to at least three experts. Editorial decisions about each manuscript are made separately.

Reports of APA boards, committees, and task forces. Reports are reviewed by a committee of the Editorial Board. They may be accepted in whole or in part, or may be rejected. Revisions are generally not requested because such reports are based on group consensus and have gone through extensive review and approval by the relevant APA governance bodies. Reports that are not accepted for publication may be submitted to specialty APA journals, considered for posting on the APA website, or deposited as full-text documents in PsycEXTRA. Practice guidelines that have been adopted as APA policy by the Council of Representatives will be automatically published in AP.

Figures. Graphics files are welcome if supplied as Tiff, EPS, or PowerPoint files. If submitted in hard copy, high-quality printouts or glossies are needed for all figures. The minimum line weight for line art is 0.5 point for optimal printing. When possible, please place symbol legends below the figure image instead of to the side.

Permissions. Authors are required to obtain and provide to the editor on final acceptance all necessary permissions to reproduce in print and electronic form any copyrighted work, including, for example, test materials (or portions thereof) and photographs of people.

Publication policies. APA policy prohibits an author from submitting the same manuscript for concurrent consideration by two or more publications. APA's policy regarding posting articles on the Internet may be found at www.apa.org/journals/authors/posting.html. APA policy prohibits as well publication of any manuscript that has already been published in whole or substantial part elsewhere. Authors have an obligation to consult journal editors if there is any question concerning prior publication of part or all of their submitted manuscripts. Also, authors of research reports submitted to APA journals are expected to have their data available throughout the editorial review process and for at least five years after the date of publication. Of course, APA expects authors submitting to this journal to adhere to the APA ethical standards regarding previous publication of data (Standard 8.13) and making research data available (Standard 8.14). Authors of research reports will be required to state in writing that they have complied with APA ethical standards in the treatment of their sample, human or animal, or to describe the details of treatment. A copy of the APA Ethical Principles may be obtained at www.apa.org/ethics/ or by writing the APA Ethics Office, 750 First Street, NE, Washington, DC 20002-4242. APA requires all contributing authors to reveal any possible conflict of interest in the conduct and reporting of research (e.g., financial interests in a test or procedure, funding by pharmaceutical companies for drug research). Authors of accepted manuscripts will be required to transfer copyright to APA. AP publishes photographs of authors that accompany their articles, but this is not a requirement for publication. Photographs may be included in regular and award-related articles and in special features; photographs in obituaries are at the discretion of the section editor. Photographs are not included for articles with "institutional authorship" (where a group is the author) and in comments.

Review policy. The AP review process is handled by the editor-in-chief, the managing editor, and a board of associate editors. The review process for all manuscripts occurs in two stages. The first stage is conducted by the editor-in-chief and the managing editor, and the second stage is handled by one of the AP associate editors. Approximately 70% of author-submitted manuscripts are returned without review within 30 days for a host of reasons: Empirical manuscripts are more appropriate for one of the APA primary journals; topic of the manuscript or style of the writing is too specialized for the broad AP readership; the same topic was recently covered in the journal; inappropriate content or style; or other, more typical reasons such as the paper does not offer a major contribution to the field or is simply not written well enough. Masked review. As a matter of policy, the identities of authors and reviewers are masked. Manuscripts that are peer reviewed are circulated without their title pages to mask the identity of the authors. Each copy of a manuscript should include a separate title page with authors' names and affiliations, and these should not appear anywhere else on the manuscript. Footnotes that identify the authors should be typed on a separate page. Authors should make every effort to see that the manuscript itself contains no clues to their identity.

Presubmission checklist. A presubmission checklist can be found at www.apa.org/pubs/journals/amp/precheck.aspx. The purpose of the checklist is to enable authors to evaluate a manuscript in light of the mission of the journal and the factors that are most salient in the initial round of editorial review.

Manuscript submission. Submit manuscripts electronically via the Manuscript Submission Portal at www.apa.org/pubs/journals/amp and click on Instructions to Authors. In addition to addresses and phone numbers, authors should supply electronic mail addresses and fax numbers. Authors should keep a copy of the manuscript to guard against loss.

Appeals process. For manuscripts rejected without review. Authors of manuscripts rejected without review may appeal the decision to the editor-in-chief, requesting a reconsideration of the decision. If that appeal is rejected but the author believes the decision is inappropriate, the author may next appeal to the APA chief editorial advisor, the ombudsperson for all APA journals, who is not an APA employee. If this appeal fails, the author may make a final appeal to an Appeals Committee, consisting of the chair of the Publications and Communications (P&C) Board, the chair of the Council of Editors (composed of the editors of all APA journals), and the APA Board of Directors' liaison to the P&C Board. For manuscripts rejected after peer review. An author wishing to appeal a manuscript should direct the editorial appeal first to the AP associate editor who made the rejection. If the associate editor declines to further consider the manuscript, or the associate editor does a second review of the manuscript and still rejects it, the author may appeal next to the AP editor-in-chief. If the AP editor-in-chief believes the appeal has merit, the manuscript may be reassigned to a new associate editor for independent re-review. If the AP editor-in-chief rejects the appeal, the author may request that the appeal and the manuscript be sent to the APA chief editorial advisor for evaluation. The next levels of appeal are the Appeals Committee and the APA Board of Directors. For rejected comments. Decisions on comments are final and cannot be appealed.

E-mail address. The address of the editorial office of the American Psychologist is APeditor@apa.org. Please do not submit manuscripts to this e-mail address or directly to the editor-in-chief. All manuscripts should be submitted through the AP electronic Manuscript Submission Portal at www.apa.org/pubs/journals/amp to be properly acknowledged and processed.
